

Elizabeth Orlandini is a Public Health Specialist in the Immunization Action Program at the Rockland County Department of Health, working to increase vaccine confidence and uptake in children and adults in Rockland through community-level education and outreach initiatives. Before joining the Immunization Action Program, she was a graduate student in the Community Health & Social Sciences department at the CUNY School of Public Health & Health Policy, where she studied health equity, community-based participatory research, and implementation science.
